Reason for Disappointment.

There are, no doubt, repinings that in the relief of Ladysmith has not yet been accomplished. Besides four complete brigades of regular infantry, and a battalion or two over, Sir Redvers Buller will by now have on the road to Colenso seven batteries of field artillery, some naval guns, between 2,000 and 3,000 South African cavairy, and one or two regiments of regular cavalry. In view of the numerical and artillery strength of the Boers, their mobility as consisting mainly of mounted infantry, and their daring as raiders, the general is well advised to proceed cautiously, repairing the railway and rebuilding bridges as he advances, in order to secure his communications.

The situation will be more correctly ap-The situation will be more correctly appreciated if I mention that it is now stated on credible authority that the Boers have something like a hundred thousand men in the field. General Joubert alone has between 30,000 and 40,000. In his recent plunge forward with the intention of rushing Maritzburg he had 20,000 men, and he must have left from 10,000 to 20,000 round Ladysmith to keep Sir George Whate in check.

"Where have the Boers recruited 100,000 men?" it will be asked. The reply is that they have obtained them from the Dutch invaded colonies. The fact can no longer be disguised that the Dutch pophas risen almost en masse in districts invaded by the Boers. In Natal this has been the case and from the Cape there are figures proving it. There is one commands, for instance, which crossed from the Orange State 500 strong, and in comparatively short time was increased rebels to 5,000. Moreover, it has now en ascertained that, although Cronjel of the third that the second of the Boers engoded in the battle on Modder river, yet none of the Boers engoded at Belmont were with him, and onje's men had not even heard of the title of Belmont. The Boers who were feated at Belmont, were diven beat into the second on the second of the second on the second of the second battle of Belmont. The Boers who were defeated at Belmont were driven back into the Orange Free State. It is, therefore, tolerably clear that with the force besleging Kimberley, with Cronje's army, the force hurled into the Orange Free State, and the detached commandoes which General Garacre is taking care of, there must be about 30,000 Boers in that part of the country. Seeing that the Cape Dutch have taken to arms so readily, a feeling is growing up that the government ought to make a stern example of those caught with arms in their hands. "It would do good to hang a dozen or two of the traitors," is a remark one constantly hears. To this there is the awkward reply that all the prisoners profess to have commandeered by force, and it is difficult to differentiate between those who have been forcibly commandeered and those who were willing rebels.

A Brigade of Militia. I am informed that if Sir Redvers Buller asks for further reinforcements the war office will send out a brigade of militia. By to conciliate those militia officers who have their force and the preference shown to the reserve of the line. Within the last few days nearly a dozen colonels of militia reg-iments have written to Lord Wolseley begiments have written to Lord Woiseley begging that in the event of more men being required at the seat of war the militia should not be passed over. Preference will be given to those militia regiments which have undergone training by the side of the regular troops at Aldershot or Salisbury.

The Morning Post is authority for the statement that the total British forces employed in South Africa will shortly reach 120,000 men. Chamberlain's Bad Break. Mr. Chamberiain's speech on foreign af-fairs at Leicester has done him infinite harm with the tory party. A tory mem-ber the other night said, "Thank God, he has made himself impossible either as has made himself impossible either as prime minister or as leader of the tory party." What the tories specially resent is not only the language of the speech, but the moment of its delivery. Lord Salisbury was ill, and suffering from a great domestic bereavement. Mr. Chamberlain had an interview with the German empeter, and at the very first emporturity he domestic bereavement. Mr. Chamberlain had an interview with the German emperor, and at the very first opportunity he made a speech suggesting that he was directing the affairs of the empire, arranging understandings, and concluding alliances. The conservatives justly regard the conduct of the colonial secretary as ungenerous and unfair to the prime minister. The splutter caused by the speech in foreign capitals is settling down and Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour will probably be able to prevent its interfering with the good relations which exist between this country and the United States and Germany. It has ruined, however, Mr. Chamberlain's political future, and rendered it impossible that he can fill any higher office in the government than that which he now occupies. Some conservatives are beginning to doubt whether he is fit to conduct the negotiations that will follow the conclusion of the war.

The French ambassador has gone to Paris, and it is said that he has been summoned by M. Delcasse to discuss with him the state of feeling in this country. The here to know something of public sentisensation he has created. He is rarely happy unless his name is much on the pub

London Journalism. The war with the Transvaal is telling with deadly effect on the editors of liberal papers. Mr. Massingham, as I noted last week, has retired from the Chronicle in consequence of differences with the proprietors on this question; and now Mr. Crook has resigned his position as editor of the Echo in consequence of differences with his directors on the Transvaal war. Mr. Crook holds strongly that the war is unjust his directors on the Transvaal war. Mr. Crook holds strongly that the war is unjust and unnecessary, but these pro-Boer opinions do not meet the views of the directors of the company to which the paper belongs. This is even a more remarkable case than Mr. Massingham's. All the directors of the paper are liberals, and some of them strong radicals, and yet the majority are dissatisfied with the mildly pro-Boer attitude which Mr. Crook has taken on the question of the day. Two of Mr. Crook's colleagues retire with him.

The movement for starting a new liberal paper is making some headway. I believe that £50,000 has now been obtained, but at the same time the promoters of the scheme must understand that much more capital than this is required to found a penny morning paper with any chance of success. It would be rash to make this attempt with a smaller capital than £50,000, and the proprieters must face the content of the capital than £50,000, and the proprieters must face the content.

Old Age Records. The humorous advice of Dickens to people desirous of old age, that they should go to live in East Anglia and be centenarians, must have been founded on observation. The local government board's inspector for the eastern countles states that in the workhouses of his district old age is comworkhouses of his district old age is common. He has been at the pains to take the ages of ten of the oldest paupers in each, and reduce them to county averages, whereupon it appears that in twenty-two workhouses in Norfolk the average of the ten oldest is eighty-four years, in fifteen workhouses of Suffolk the same, in fifteen of Essex eighty-six years, and in the Wisbech Union of Cambridgeshire eighty-nine. The district as a whole has seventy-one paupers of ninety years and over. Inat the climate is to be oredited with this longevity may be doubted. The old folk belong with rare exception to the class of laboring agriculturists, and their own and their forefathers' plain living in the open air is what has given them stamina.

Tuxedo Sketch Club Entertains. The Tuxedo Sketch Club gave an enter-

ainment last Friday evening at the Naional Rifles' Hall, for the benefit of the Old Guard, G. A. R. The program opened with an overture, "The Tuxedo March," by Dr. C. B. Boyd, followed by a minstrel performance. An opening chorus by the en-tire club and the sketches which followed were received with hearty applause.

The slack wire act of Allen G. Jennings. who is an amateur in this line, was pronounced to be one of the best performances of the evening. The remainder of the program was composed of illustrated songs, quartet singing and musical and athletic sketches.

TWENTY FAMOUS NAVAL BATTLES; Salamis to Santiago. By Edward Kirk Rawson, professor, U. S. Navy, Superintendent Naval Wat Records. In two volumes. New York: Thomas Y. Orowell and Company. Prof. Rawson, very well known in Wash ington, is most admirably fitted to assem-ble a score of such records as the sea, with all its tragedies and heroisms and sacrifices, has produced within the range of history. His connection with the Navy Department for many years has enabled him to go deep in the research which has resulted in these two beautiful and valuable books. Some of his material is virtually new, and the whole is treated with the hand of a close student of naval science. Beginning with Salamis, 480 B. C., he takes in chronological order the battles of Actium, 31 B. C., and Lepanto, 1571; the defeat of the Armada, 1588; the last fight of the "Revenge," 1591; the fight off Dungeness, 1652; the battle of La Hogue, 1682; the contest between "Bon Homme Richard" and "Serapis," 1779; the battle of the Nile, 1798; the duel between "Foudroyant" and "Guillaume Tell," 1799; Trafalgar, 1805; the battle between "Constitution" and Guirleaume Tell," 1799; Trafalgar, 1805; the battle between "Monitor" and Merrimac, 1862, and "Kearsarge" and "Alabama," 1864; Mobile Bay, 1864; Lissa, 1886; the victory over the "Huascar," 1879; Manila Bay, 1898, and Santiago, 1898.

The introduction is a most suggestive essay upon the development of naval warfare and the tendency toward the humanizing of strife on the sea. The author traces a growing disposition to accord higher honors to the naval victor in time of war and to the undistinguished but faithful scamen in time of peace. Summing up the personal factors which have made the twenty great naval battles famous in world history by reason of the peculiar force of the respective commanders, Prof. Rawson concludes:

"They have nearly all gone over the side into the darkness of the ever-receding past—admirals all; high admirals some of them; the Greek with the olive skin, the black-haired Roman, the swart Spaniard, the fair-haired Englishman, the quick-brained Gaul, the stout-hearted Dutchman, the ver-Beginning with Salamis, 480 B. THE LETTERS OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON TO HIS FAMILY AND FRIENDS. Selected and Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by Sidney Colvin. In two volumes. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Washington: Brentain's.

Stevenson's life was divided into several death. Mr. Colvin prefaces the letters with a general introduction which embraces a critical appreciation of the author and the man. He divides the letters into the respective phases of Stevenson's life and prefaces each series with a very brief biographical memorandum, just sufficient to explain the purport of the references. Many of the letters were written to Mr. Colvin himself, while others are scattered among a host of relatives and friends, all breathing, however, the poetic spirit of the man who has left such a deep impress upon modern literature.

The growing world that knows Sidney Lanier as the true poet he was can never sufficiently express its grief at his early death and the sufferings of his last days which unquestionably robbed literature of some of its richest possibilities. The pathetic story of the poet's struggles, financial and physical, is told in the letters which make up this volume. But there is a brighter, sweeter story in it than that, the story of delight for the companionship thought, the devotion of a true friend, the gratitude of the recipient of many attentions. The letters are arranged in four groups: First are those written to Mr. Gibson Peacock, editor of the Philadelphia Bulletin, who became Lanier's friend through an appreciative review of his first long poem, "Corn;" next come letters from Lanier to his wife, comprising "a poet's musical impressions," followed by a charming series of letters which passed between Lanier and Bayard Taylor, between whom there existed a strong affection; and the book closes with letters which Lanier wrote to Paul Hamilton Hayne. Lanier was an exceptional letter writer, putting much of thought, the devotion of a true friend, the exceptional letter writer, putting much of his strong personality into his epistles.

The first volume of this series dealt with historic towns of new England, and the third one will be devoted to the south Thus the scope of the work is expanding and will perhaps in time include the entire American area. There is material enough The plan followed is calculated to produce good results. A resident of the city or town described is, whenever possible town described is, whenever possible, chosen for the authorship of the article. Rev. Mr. Powell is the editor of the scries. The present volume includes Albany, Saratoga, Schenectady, Newburg, Tarrytown-on-Hudson, New York, Brooklyn, Princeton, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Buffalo and Pittsburg, Albert Shaw contributes an introductory article covering the whole middle state area, from an historical point of view.

Zangwill is a determined realist, but with a very narrow scope. There are many readers who do not find in his renditions of Jewish life that literary modicum which they seek. There are many others who recognize the stroke of genius in the power recognize the stroke of genius in the power to portray the living emotions of a race with a vast history, under modern conditions. The gloomy note which has heretofore pervaded Zangwill's works is dominant in these "Ghetto tragedies," short stories which have been printed from time to time in magazine publications.

revengeful wife, forms the basis of this revengeful wife, forms the basis of this poetic tragedy. Mr. Swinburne clothes it in a beautiful form. His material is repulsive. The theme is too characteristically medieval and Italian to be delectable today, however fascinating may be the artistic rendition.

the yards are manned, as they disappear over the side the salute is fired, and those of us who remain, seamen or landsmen, it matters not, are under orders to give the 'vast shout.'" was when the young author journeyed across the ocean and the American conti-nent as an emigrant, roughing it with the rest of the home seekers, but finding in his raw surroundings much to ripen his character and talents. The letters which flowed from his pen during these various phases of his life are collated by one of his most devoted friends, Sidney Colvin, to whom Stevenson formally intrusted the task in a memorandum which he gave to his stepson in Taihiti in 1888 in anticipation of his death. Mr. Colvin prefaces the letters with
